AoA Integrates with Disability Agencies to form New HHS Division

Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) Secretary Kathleen Sebelius announced last week the formation of a new HHS division that combines the Administration on Aging (AoA) with the Administration on Developmental Disabilities and the Office on Disability. The Administration for Community Living (ACL) provides a formal infrastructure to ensure consistency and coordination in community living policy across the Federal government. The reorganization will strengthen HHS efforts to support community living, regardless of age. Existing programs intended to serve both older Americans and persons with disabilities, such as the Lifespan Respite Care program and the National Clearinghouse for Long Term Care Information, will benefit from this integrated organization, while initiatives designed to meet the unique needs of seniors or people with disabilities will retain their distinct programs.

Assistant Secretary for Aging Kathy Greenlee, will also serve as the Administrator of the Administration for Community Living.

Florida AAA Bridging the Digital Divide through Computer Training Program for Older Adults

The Area Agency on Aging (AAA) for Miami-Dade and Monroe Counties in Florida has helped older Americans master digital technology with funding from Title III of the Older Americans Act. The AAA launched a pilot program that offered computer training tailored to the needs of older adults, taking into account different tech and literacy levels, limited English proficiency and educational barriers. Costs related to the program were kept down by developing partnerships with other social service agencies, universities and Internet service providers who donated equipment, services, and case management. Also, AT&T and Comcast gave a year of free broadband service and tech support to the program.

For more information on this pilot program, contact Max B. Rothman at rothmanm@elderaffairs.org
